May-Queen.—With the card in the tree
And the rainbow on the sea,
And the tint of the rose
Has the measure of our love begun?
And my people, one and all,
Should keep true to my will.
Till my fidelity falter
All the setting of the sun
Till we win the golden faith
For ever full of grace
How can you keep me in
In a place where my heart should be
For so long hast thou lain
With her tears for every day
And beneath the moon of May
Even cruel maids are kind.

RECITATIVE AND DUET.
Lover.—Oh! so soon to cast me by
Can you behold, without memory's upbraiding
Love keeps a record more sternly than man.
O! of each now that is broken by maiden,
Love keeps a record, more sternly than man.
O! of each now that is broken by maiden,
Love keeps a record more sternly than man.
O! of each now that is broken by maiden,

Lover.—Why hast thou thus changed thy fancy?
Lover.—Why?

Lover.—Then must I linger here alone
To melt her cruel heart of stone—
Go lull her, all ye sighs and fears!
Go crown her, all ye starry tears
Weep, woe, and weep, all ye sighing tears—
Weep, woe, and weep, all ye sighing tears—
Weep, woe, and weep, all ye sighing tears—

May-Queen.—Good-morrow, friend,
With the carol in the tree
With the carol in the tree
With the carol in the tree

Lover.—For the lover full of grief
Can you behold, without memory's upbraiding
Love keeps a record more sternly than man.
O! of each now that is broken by maiden,
Love keeps a record more sternly than man.
O! of each now that is broken by maiden,

Lover.—Are we not brought up together,
Needing neither oath nor vow?

May-Queen.—Why must I linger here alone
To melt her cruel heart of stone—
Go lull her, all ye sighs and fears!
Go crown her, all ye starry tears
Weep, woe, and weep, all ye sighing tears—
Weep, woe, and weep, all ye sighing tears—
Weep, woe, and weep, all ye sighing tears—

Chorus.

Hark! their notes the hautboys swell.
And the cornet solo cell.

And then the cornet solo.

Oh, large lady! bring the pleasing sounds of your own voice! On you I may depend for cheer, when need for cheer is felt. I dream of an antique bride, but not in the old way. I see a lady of my life waiting for me. I think of the sea and the sky. I see a lady of my life standing still. With broken heart, on bended knee, I pray to grace. O, see my feet! 'Tis [woman's name]—which is the other?—

CHORUS. What must we do?—Oh, large lady!—What must we do?

CHORUS. What must we do?—Oh, lady!—What must we do?

THAMES IS PROUD, AND WELL MAY BE;

Never did the greybeard see

Hark! their notes the hautboys swell,

And the river flows fair,

Since his stream began to flow,

And a river he did grow.

Singing—"Glory to the Queen."

To proclaim our lady nigh:

Breathing love and breathing joy;

STAND ALONGSIDE!

THAMES IS PROUD, AND WELL MAY BE;

Never did the greybeard see

Hark! their notes the hautboys swell,

And the river flows fair,

Since his stream began to flow,

And a river he did grow.

Singing—"Glory to the Queen."
