SUNDAY, November the Ninth, and Lord’s Mayor’s Day without any Lord Mayor’s Show to speak of! The general mental condition of the populace was one of disgust: our Lord Mayor’s Show is always a poor thing enough, but since it is the only Pageant left to us, surely it would be better to improve it than to abolish it. A dinner was given to two thousand poor people at our end of the town; said to be in place of the Show. One rejoices to think that these poor people had something like a good dinner, but it should have been with the Show and not instead of it. If these poor people had their dinner, how many poor workmen had to go without the jobs which a great show always occasions?

The Pageant of Lord Mayor’s Day is not only the last survival of many Civic Shows and Pageants: it is also a very ancient and historical procession, and for that reason alone should be jealously maintained. Until about sixty years ago the Procession included the journey from London to Westminster by barge. The Lord Mayor, Sheriffs, and Alderman rode from the Mansion House to Queen Street, where they embarked in their State Barge accompanied by the State Barges of all the City Companies which had any. Those Companies which had none marched in procession, with banners and music as is done now. The water show was headed by the Stationers’ Barge, which, after the landing of the Master and Wardens, proceeded to Lambeth Palace, where the crew received a present from the Archbishop of sixteen bottles of wine. In return they presented to the Archbishop copies of all the almanacks published by the Company. The Lord Mayor returned by land to Guildhall, where the banquet was served to about 1,500 persons.

A hundred years ago the day was kept as one of universal festivity: it was the great holiday of the year for London; the Companies had bands erected along the line of march; everybody along the March of the Pageant was Sir Gilbert Heathcote, in the reign of Queen Anne. The Pageant used to be embellished by speeches or orations, in verse, composed by the city poet, an official who ceased to exist in the reign of George the First. A very good account of the Lord Mayor’s Pageant may be found in Hone’s Every Carlyle and Tennison.

REMINISCENCES OF AN AMERICAN JOURNALIST.

By Judge of the United States Court.

THE HISTORIC PECULIARITIES of Carlyle and of the Tenth Hussars, are both so striking, that the story of the Tenth Hussars, in life, in the House of Commons, or in the House of Lords, would be far more interesting than that of the Tenth Hussars, in the course of their service in the army of Napoleon and John Bright with equal severity, when the battle was over, over and above our wounds were more than the wounds of our country.

There will live in our island story a Tale of the Tenth Hussars. They had charged in the grand old fashion with furious and stormy rushing.

W. "Follow me, lad," from the Colonel, and an answering "Come on!"

From the Staff as the troopers past it, in glory of pride and play, they shouted, and they never forgot me, following "Good Luck!"

Wounded and worn but not in silence, in silence of pride and play.

The man who led them often, but was never in lead again,

That the secret anguish! think of the dull remorse!

The man who'd led them often, but was never to lead again.

The General spoke out bravely as ever a soldier can.

Here the whole country is clothed in the uniform of the Tenth Hussars; and the County would feel it to be a great thing.

"Speak out, old chap!" said he."

PEOPLE'S PALACE DEBATING SOCIETY.

Chairmen—Mr. Walter Marshall.

The usual weekly meeting of the above Society was held on Tuesday week. In the absence of Mr. Marshall the chair was taken by Mr. Dixon, and the meeting was opened by the President, Mr. Marshall.

Mr. Marshall proposed the adjournment of the meeting, which was carried unanimously.

PEOPLE'S PALACE DRAMATIC CLUB.

A General Meeting was held last Wednesday, Mr. B. A. Rossi in the chair.

Mr. B. A. Rossi moved the adjournment of the meeting, which was carried unanimously.

BEAUMONT CYCLING CLUB.

A impromptu race by several members was made to Woodford on a Sunday afternoon, 1888, by Mr. B. H. Lytton. His club started from the Avenue Club, Clifton, when they were muscles into the streets of the town on the way to the Woodford Club, where they were joined by a band of cyclists, and from there on to the finish, a distance of about 5 miles. The race was won by Mr. B. H. Lytton, who covered the distance in 1 hour and 15 minutes.

LADIES' SOCIAL CLUB.

The large and well-kept room of the Club was made over to Tuesday evening, when some of the members gave a party at the Club. The entertainment was a very good one, and the members were much pleased with the way in which the party was conducted.

TECHNICAL SCHOOLS ATHLETIC CLUB.

The annual exhibition of casts from the Technical Schools was held on Monday evening, 1888, at the Club. The casts were shown in a large and well-lighted room, and were much appreciated by the Art Students. The exhibition was a very successful one, and was much enjoyed by the members of the Club.

IN THE QUEEN'S BALL.

I am happy to say that the Drama Club, after so many regrettable vicissitudes, has settled down, and is now in a position to carry on the work of its organization. I am happy to say that the Drama Club is working hard to accomplish its purpose of bringing together a group of actors to perform plays in the Queen's Hall. The Queen's Hall is a large and well-equipped theatre, and it is the hope of the Drama Club to make the Queen's Hall a permanent home for the club's productions.

THE PALACE JOURNAL.

The Palace Journal, a new and interesting weekly, was founded by Mr. B. H. Lytton, and is now in the hands of Mr. B. H. Lytton. The Journal is published every Thursday, and is devoted to the interests of the members of the Palace. The Journal is well-written, and is much appreciated by the members of the Palace.
That helped me too, for it is always best to be among the best.

That was learning the machinery: getting to understand it. I grew in the works, in the smoke and the noise. The hand of his niece. Ha! ha! The hand of his niece. You never saw such a hand. I had held in her hands. That idea, then, was her fate. She had added to the whole North of England who has worked so hard as I have. For I had so much to do. From six to six in the works. It seems long, doesn't it, looking back? But the time has come when I can say that I meant to do it all. It seems to me, and I think the same of him, that it is only in the lap of leisure that one can do it all.

The machinery, the plans, the whole country. It is only in the lap of leisure that one can do it all.

I called it, in my own mind, because I knew that it was. And then suddenly, because you were there, a new light came to me. That was what Julian Carteret, at the door of the conservatory, listened to. "Rose," said John Gower softly, but with an air of confidence which made her bitter heart more angry and bitter.

"Do you really love me so much?" she said timidly, "as I do for you?" For she was another sort of woman.

"I cannot love you as you love me, John," she murmured, "but I will try."

"Then let them marry in God's name. It is not a propos to talk of such a thing."

"But John, who made no sign, and whose eyes were downward cast."

"I know not what to say," she said.

She made no kind of reply. What was there to say? She took no kind of interest in his struggles.

"What a day that was!" her lover went on. "I was almost overpowered. I could hardly think of anything else. I was almost beside myself."

"The kindest of old widows," said John, laughing.

I would do anything for you but one thing —"Was it to take me as I am?"

"To give you up."

I would have been satisfied to take me as I am, she went on, "knowing that I can never—never love you as you love me."

"Quite satisfied, Rose—more than satisfied. So long as I have you, that is enough."

"I would do anything for you but one thing—"

"The death of the old love, too."

The death of the old love, too. She was the one thing she would have asked him to do. She wished that it had never been framed, or had been forgotten, like the other things. She wished that it had never been across his brain. But John Gower was not a man to let go a friend who was often good.

Calendar of the Week.

[November 11, 1888.]

November 11th. John Milton, greatest epic poet of modern times, died, aged 68 years, on this day in 1674. John Milton was a Londoner, born in Bread Street, and baptised in All Hallows. He completed his education at Oxford and Cambridge. The church is now destroyed, having fallen a victim to the rage for cruelty. Milton's first book, "Paradise Lost," was dedicated to his former teacher, Dr. John.arange, the town of St. Martin's in the Fields, is now a famous London church, where many important events have taken place. The church was built in 1662, and is dedicated to the Virgin Mary, Queen of Heaven. The church is now an annex to the Royal Exchange, and contains the Chemical Society and the Royal Society of Arts.

November 12th. St. Matilda. Like St. Brice, this is a very ancient festival. "St. Brice's Day" was a day of great rejoicing among the English, and was celebrated with games and feasting. The festival was observed in honour of St. Brice, the patron saint of London, who was killed by the Danes in 881. The festival was observed as late as the 17th century, and is still celebrated in many parts of England.

November 8th. "St. Martin's Day." This day is celebrated throughout Western Europe as a festival, and is known as "Martinmas." At this time, we are entering upon the short dark weather of winter. The day is called "St. Martin's Day," because on this day Martinmas, or St. Martin's Day, is celebrated throughout Western Europe. The festival is observed in honour of St. Martin, the patron saint of soldiers, and is celebrated with games and feasting.

November 9th. "St. Hugh of Lincoln." St. Hugh of Lincoln was a great English saint, who was born in the year 1075 and died in 1135. He was a student at Christ's College, Cambridge, and was later appointed to the See of Lincoln. St. Hugh was a great scholar, and is remembered for his many works on theology and philosophy. The day is celebrated throughout England as a day of great rejoicing, and is known as "St. Hugh's Day." The festival is celebrated with games and feasting.

November 14th. "St. Brice's Day." This day is celebrated as a festival throughout Western Europe, and is known as "St. Brice's Day." The festival is observed in honour of St. Brice, the patron saint of London, who was killed by the Danes in 881. The festival is celebrated with games and feasting.

November 15th. "St. Catherine's Day." St. Catherine of Alexandria was a great Christian saint, and is celebrated throughout the Eastern Church as a day of great rejoicing. The festival is observed with games and feasting.

November 26th. "St. Martin's Day." This day is celebrated throughout Western Europe as a festival, and is known as "Martinmas." At this time, we are entering upon the short dark weather of winter. The day is called "St. Martin's Day," because on this day Martinmas, or St. Martin's Day, is celebrated throughout Western Europe. The festival is observed in honour of St. Martin, the patron saint of soldiers, and is celebrated with games and feasting.

November 30th. "St. Martin's Day." This day is celebrated throughout Western Europe as a festival, and is known as "Martinmas." At this time, we are entering upon the short dark weather of winter. The day is called "St. Martin's Day," because on this day Martinmas, or St. Martin's Day, is celebrated throughout Western Europe. The festival is observed in honour of St. Martin, the patron saint of soldiers, and is celebrated with games and feasting.
