Notes of the Week.

THE most important event of this week has been the sharp frost of Sunday and Monday. The thermometer actually touched Zero in Kent and Sussex, while in London it went down to 10 or 21 degrees of freezing. This is most unusual for the month of March. At the same time it is not unprecedented. In the year 1855 there was an intense frost which lasted till the month of March. In the year 1790, there was a three month's frost, lasting into March. In the year 1796, there was a frost which lasted from November till April: and in 1915, a frost on Midsummer day destroyed all the fruits of the earth. This has been a very remarkable year for exceptional weather. Let us hope that we are now going to settle into a more comfortable swing.

It is said that it has become almost impossible to enlist recruits in the South of England. If this is so, it is a very serious thing, because an army we must have, and if we cannot get an army of volunteers we must have an army of conscripts. There ought to be no difficulty in getting good men to enlist: two things only seem needful for the purpose. First, that the soldiers' shilling a day shall be a real shilling and not reduced by stoppages to fourpence as it is now: next, the Government shall employ for messengers, writers, and the lower grade clerks, none but men who have served in the army and navy. A great deal has been done already for the soldier. First of all, flogging has been absolutely abandoned. In the year 1859, it was enacted that soldiers should be reduced from first class to second class before the punishment could be inflicted: next, in 1868, flogging was abolished in time of peace: it is now abandoned in time of war. The deaths in the army has been reduced from 17 per 1,000 to half that amount by attention to sanitary measures. Now for a young fellow of spirit, there would seem no better choice than to enlist for seven years, from nineteen to twenty, with the certainty that after that time he would receive some appointment for life in the Civil Service. He will be well fed, well dressed, have employment of a light kind, with the chance, which all soldiers enjoy, of seeing a campaign and having a little fighting. Yet the first essential is that he should feel certain that the country will reward him for having lost or thrown away his trade, by providing for him when his fighting days are done.

The influenza is not yet gone, but it seems to have spent its force. We are now able to trace its course. It first appeared in Southern Russia in October of last year. By the middle of November it had spread over the whole of Russia. By the middle of December it had covered the whole of the Continent. In January it had established itself here, and in the United States of America, where it killed about 12,000 people. In February it had got to Mexico and Central America. And there, for ought I know, it is still.

Mr. Astor, of New York, is dead. He was remarkable for his great wealth and for his quiet and unostentatious life. He was always afraid that if he paraded his wealth, the people would take it from him. Americans, however, have too great a respect for rich men to take their money from them. They are quite safe, unless the pressure of the poorer classes becomes too great. Then there may be revolution.

Meantime the Astor family have a million a year—not dollars, but pounds. Their income is over a million a year; it is nearly £3,000 a day—£125 an hour—tenpence a second! What a pity to have to die and go away and give... up that money. All of us have had dreams of being rich enough to be able to do this, and to be able to do things that are considerate and generous. Of course the question of whether this is a good thing or not is a different question.

The Office-Boy and the Railroad Ticket

By the way, in dealing with the question of whether the railroad ticket is a good thing or not, I would like to say that I think it is a good thing. It is a thing that makes life a little easier for the average person. It is a thing that makes it possible for people to travel from one place to another without having to worry about the cost of the ticket. It is a thing that makes it possible for people to travel from one place to another without having to worry about the cost of the ticket. It is a thing that makes it possible for people to travel from one place to another without having to worry about the cost of the ticket.

The Book of the Month

The book of the month for April is "The Book of the Month" by J. B. Priestley. The book is a collection of essays on a variety of topics. The essays are well written and thought-provoking. The book is a good read for anyone who is interested in literature and philosophy.
