Notes of the Week.

WE have notices of a Conversazione to be given by the Corporation of London in the Guildhall next month, in celebration of the penny postage. What an epoch in modern history is the penny postage! Before Sir Rowland Hill's Reform, the rate of postage (beyond the limits of the London district office) varied from 4d. to 1s. 8d. for any single letter, a letter being interpreted to mean a single sheet of paper not exceeding one ounce in weight. Sir Rowland Hill's pamphlet exposed many of the commercial evils resulting from excessive taxation, and the difficulties and temptations arising from the complicated system of payments, and proposed to remove much mischief by enacting that the charge of postage from one post-town to any other post-town in the British Isles should be at a uniform rate, and that rate as suggested should be one penny for each half-ounce. The general public received the idea with enthusiasm, but the functionaries of the post office were loud in their protests, and the excitement must have been tremendous. Petitions in favour of the uniform penny postage poured into both Houses, and at last the measure was carried. Collectors of postage stamps are familiar with the much coveted "Mulready" envelope, designed by the clever artist Mulready, which was to supply an engraved envelope to be issued by the post office for the purpose of franking letters. The "Mulready," however, was but short-lived, and gave place to the plain envelope with the stamp embossed upon it. But there were some bits of poetry on the old "Mulready"—in both the lower corners of the envelope are pictured joyful recipients of news through the penny post. Great distances seemed to be straightway spanned by this new regulation; the poor could receive and send news without heavy payment; and the increase in universal correspondence fully justified Sir Rowland Hill's prophecies. What a revolution the penny post caused! Think of the letters that come in now every day—indeed, every hour—and the time that is spent in answering them; yet correspondence is not what it was, the days of Lord Chesterfield and Mme. de Sevigne are over; the penny post has changed our ways considerably. Go and look at some of those old letters, compiled by our grandparents, carefully written from beginning to end, no corner wasted, often indeed crossed and re-crossed. How restrained in expression, how neatly worded, how elaborately each sentence is rounded off! Compare some such letter with any one you receive in the course of to-day! Study the differences, why, there is a whole volume of history in this comparison! How they must have been valued—those old faded letters! What a joy they must have been. Now we are content to receive a flippant little note, just covering one side of thick cream laid paper, with a few little remarks thrown carelessly off the pen, and a great many dashes, and not a few notes of interjection to fill up the gaps where grammar fails. But are not there some letters infinitely more interesting and natural, and "newsy," than those priggish, formal, stiff productions of our grandparents and grandmothers? Infinitely, I have no doubt, but—

The soul of the "tripper" may rejoice! The Isle of Man is to have its Eiffel Tower, and there is already a Douglas Head Suspension Bridge Company formed. Instead of the old-fashioned ferry, there will be a high level bridge to enable tourists to reach the Douglas Head more easily. There will be restaurants, two lifts, two saloons, and music and dancing on the floors of the Tower, and in this way the Douglas Head Suspension Bridge Company (doesn't the name itself suggest a bridge?) will further enhance the beauty and charms of Manxland.
Soccer's last forty days is over, and the moribund curiosity about its termination has been curiously quieted. There are certain a number of scientific conclusions that can be drawn from the phenomenon, but those conclusions will be very little practical utility. The limit of human enthusiasm only the astronomer who has watched the time of our world's existence can explain the situation. Even the time of our world's existence, however, is beyond the ken of most of us, so we shall be content to admit that there is no law to make us work, as there is no law that can prove the existence of any of these things.

The County Council has declined to take over places which have been offered. That appears a curious pastime to those who have had to endure the expense of building a house. But we believe that it is difficult for them to afford to have them kept up in proper order. But we must have our open spaces. We shall never do to consent to their being closed, even for a short time. It is, perhaps, a sad thing that we can often only offer the churchyards for playground and recreation; but it would be infinitely saddler to close them altogether, or to entertain the idea that they may be closed for an indefinite time.

THAT was a curious scene, with a good deal of grim humour in it, that took place at Norfolk, U.S.A., when some cabins were intended to be used as an asylum for slaves. The State Law of Virginia. By this statute anyone afflicted with a disease was compelled to work a certain number of hours each week. The disease was a very common one among the negroes, and many died of it each year. After a long period of public surgery, the highest bidder, being the highest bidder, was given the right to work the negro, and the negro was then delivered into the care of the State officials. The negro was then compelled to work, and the negro died of overwork. The negro died of overwork. The negro died of overwork. The negro died of overwork.

We have received an admirable verbal report, made by the President of the Royal Agricultural Society, of the meeting of the Society held last Friday at Liverpool, at which a great many farmers were present. The report is full of information, and will be of great value to all those who are engaged in agriculture. The report is full of information, and will be of great value to all those who are engaged in agriculture.

We have heard from the colonel of the regiment which was engaged in the recent operations in the east, that there were no important operations taking place at the time. The column met with no opposition, and was able to march on its way without interruption. The column met with no opposition, and was able to march on its way without interruption.

PEOPLE'S PALACE RAMBLING CLUB

On Saturday last twenty-two Members and Friends met at the Estate Office, Bayswater, and were conducted by Mr. Pears, the keeper of the pets and orphans, through that district; and our own Members, who are of course very well acquainted with the place, could not refrain from giving them a lesson in geography. We were shown the homes of some of the more interesting of the pets, and were conducted through the woods and fields, and were shown the various methods of farming which are used in the district. Footwear Actions.

It is simply astonishing to what risks some people will go in conjunction with the name of a yelling rage. A short time ago, two labourers, having made a bet to climb by the neck the largest spire of the Tyburn Tower, they decided that the top of the spire would be the first to reach the ball on the spire. He climbed up to the top of the spire, and then, turning round, he exclaimed: "You laborers, please turn this portion of the spire which had been adjusted, it would probably have had a far more serious result.

SYLLABUS.

The King of the Cannibal Islands visits my ship—His characteristic speech.

A REAL CANNIBAL FORK WILL BE EXHIBITED.
Picture to yourself a stem muscular figure, in fanciful bundle of arms and legs, with pistol and point in his brainy hands, and in his one eye a deep pool of blood. He is cut in clay, and painted in a circle, with a pulled-out tongue, a raised palm, and a clutched-out head. The art is done in various forms, but always with a touch of the grotesque and the fantastic, to give life to the flatness of the surface. The head is carved in a hollow, and the body is twisted in a spiral. The colors are rich and varied, and the composition is well balanced. The artist has a keen eye for detail, and his work is executed with great precision. The overall effect is one of beauty and grace, and it is sure to please any admirer of this art form. The piece would be a great addition to any collection of fine art, and it would make a wonderful gift for someone who appreciates this style of art.
